Other Info: Bain's Cape Mountain Whisky is distilled and double matured at The James Sedgwick Distillery which is situated near the foothills of the Bainskloof Pass in Wellington. The Cape Mountains rearing their heads of 850 million year old sandstone are covered by many indigenous fynbos species and this is the canvas against which South Africa's first Single Grain whisky is created.

One of the most important aspects of a premium whisky is not only what it is made of, but where it is from. Our whisky is distilled and matured in one of South Africa's most picturesque regions, setting it apart from any other whisky produced in the world. The Bainskloof Pass is home to an astounding combination of magnificent peaks, cool, sparkling streams, wooded valleys and an unmatched wealth of indigenous fynbos. To acknowledge this origin, we have created a new sub-category, Cape Mountain Whisky.

Our whisky showcases South Africa's ability to produce a premium, specialist whisky of an award-winning international standard while reflecting a unique taste of place. All stages of the process from raw material selection through to the final bottling take place in South Africa, making it a proudly South African whisky

It takes meticulous care and craftsmanship to create a premium whisky. Our dedicated Distiller, Jeff Green, is responsible for crafting South Africa's first and only 100% single grain whisky at The James Sedgwick Distillery. With a love for science and a background in biochemistry, he blends his experience with his passion for premium production to bring us a whisky of international acclaim.
