producing a single vineyard wine. This particular site is just that. Planted on a ridge in the south Adelaide hills on moisture retaining clay over ironstone, it is home to an extremely rare clone of Pinot Noir known for its bright fruit characteristics. Viticulturist Sam is in fact now responsible for farming the site, and he works it organically, with great attention to this tricky clone and the the vineyard's management. Named in homage to winemaker James' daughter, this is a very pretty, juicy number.
