Description:	"Dark cherry colour with slightly pink edge. The nose displays hints of spice and clean green leafy fruit. On the palate there's slightly unfocussed but pleasing fruit as a result of the blend with some green but not unripe notes. Pleasing soft fruit is present with good taught acidity that firms the blend up and holds the fruit together. Nice overall firm structure with medium strength, semi hard tannins on the end that, along with good clean acidity drive the medium long finish. Nice wine" - Theo Sloom, The Oxford Wine Company.

Other Info:

At the end of 2009 Susana Esteban decided to establish herself as a wine producer starting her personnel project. She decided to make wines full of character in a slightly different style of the Alentejo traditional way. For two years she looked around all of the Alentejo for the perfect vineyards to set her wines. She had to wait until 2011 to finally discover the two small vineyards that set the foundation for her first two wines. One of the vineyards is based in Évora and is set up mainly with Alicante Bouschet providing very small yields. In Portalegre, up in the mountains of São Mamede she found an old mixed planting of several different varieties, again with very small yields, that provide an amazing complexity and freshness. In 2012, after finding a few more scattered vineyards across the north and centre of Alentejo, she started making 'Aventura' (Adventure), two unoaked, handmade characterful wines, one white and one red. These are sourced from a field blend of grapes from the same vineyard with another vineyard located in Estremoz where Arinto is the main variety. Critically acclaimed, the wines from this producer are a perfect showcase of one of the new generation of winemakers, nudging the old guard respectively out of the way and setting up camp making exquisite wines.
